At 10:30 a.m. on 25 November 1953, a convey of 19 BMW sedans and two busses arrived at Doeberitz, where it proceeded through Adler Kaserne to the yard of Loewen Kaserne. The cars were occupied by about 80 KVP officers with crimson and blue service colors, among them Field Marshal Paulus who like the other VP officers wore an olive-drab uniform. The VP officers were welcomed by Colonel Goloshkin and Major Surkin and then escorted through the installation in groups. The ordnance shop, the officers' club and the EM quarters of the Loewen Kaserne were inspected. The garages which housed tanks were not visited. A dinner was given in honor of the officers at 3 p.m. The observation that Paulus was among the group of VP officers was confirmed. Soviet soldiers had to prepare the barracks installation for the visit of the German officers.

It was rumored that the installation was to be occupied by a KVP training unit in the near future.

Comment: This is the first report on Paulus being seen in a uniform.
